

Cynthia Wynn earned a B.S. Ed (Social Studies and Psychology) from University of Missouri at Columbia and a M.A. in Counseling from Washington University. She is a Licensed Professional Counselor (LPC) in the State of Missouri as well as a certified School Counselor and Psychological Examiner. Cindy was a school counselor for 32 years for the City of St. Charles School District. Cindy attended the first national peer helping conference in 1987 and began a peer program at the middle level the following year. She later assisted with the high school peer program when she worked as a high school counselor. She was also the Safe and Drug Free Grant district coordinator where she coordinated the drug and violence prevention program for the district. In this role, Cindy promoted peer helping in the district and coordinated a district wide peer helping initiative. She is a certified trainer for the National Association of Peer Program Professionals. Cindy retired from school counseling in 2003 and currently works part time for the Community Council of St. Charles County where she coordinates the Community Services Summit and assists with the fragile family initiative and other collaborative efforts. Cindy also is an adjunct professor at Lindenwood University in the graduate counselor education program where she teaches the Level I Peer Program Training. She is a member of the American School Counselor Association, American Counseling Association, National Career Development Association and National Association of Peer Program Professionals. She has served on the national board of NAPPP and currently serves on the Professional Development Committee.
